Choosing a school for your child is a fundamental decision for you as a parent, giving direction for your child's development and future career chances. Most parents want to send their child to an international school to keep future possibilities for College and University as diverse as possible and expose their children to an international environment early. It's important to know that your child can easily interact in a multicultural environment and that you have the reassurance the school offers the latest insights of educational research which are reflected in the concept of the school.

Inter-year classes: Support children in developing autonomy earlier than children in conventional classes. Interaction within an age-diverse class helps them to develop necessary social skills such as empathy, responsibility, respect and manners within a multicultural group.

Project-oriented education: Tasks will allow all students to easily develop problem solving abilities and the talent to organize themselves and their work while working on a task.

Bilingual Education: As demonstrated in the latest scientific research, shows that children who learn multiple languages at an early stage of their development are able to learn faster as their brain learns to differentiate between separate tasks easily. Classes are 70% English and 30% German.
